1. Damn Delicious

https://damndelicious.net/

I really like the clean and modern look of the Damn Delicious homepage. The bold logo at the top makes the brand memorable, and the layout is simple yet effective.
I especially like how they show large, vibrant images of featured recipes ("Dinner Tonight" section) — it immediately draws attention and makes you want to click and explore.

2. NYT Cooking

https://cooking.nytimes.com/

I love the minimalistic, clean design of the New York Times Cooking pages. It's very focused: one large image next to the recipe title and author name, with lots of white space to make it easy to read.
I also like how they display details like cook time, ratings, and comments clearly at the top of the recipe page.

3. Minimalist Baker

https://minimalistbaker.com/

I really enjoy the playful, colorful layout of Minimalist Baker.
Their recipe page feels vibrant but still very organized.
I like how they categorize recipes clearly (with tags like "Vegan", "Gluten-Free", etc.) and how big, bright images are the focus of each recipe card.
